"...My minor in Hispanic Studies gave me not only the language skills to work in this part of the world [Central America], but a broad cultural background to help me understand Latin America."

"... With the degree I have, I feel like I could continue to teach (and be very happy doing that) or I could change careers and work in a different field if I wanted to later on. Being able to communicate in Spanish and understand the grammar, culture and literature of Hispanic cultures, has opened up many opportunities to me."

"...After graduating, I worked for years as a cycling and hiking guide in Tuscany, the Dolomites and other parts of Italy, sharing my enthusiasm for Italian culture, history, food and language. After five years of cycling and travel, I did a masters' degree at the London School of Economics and wrote my thesis on Ecogastronomic Tourism and Rural Development in Tuscany (which required a lot of field research). After completing my masters, I returned to Italy to work at the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization in Rome. Now I live in Bavaria, two hours' drive from Italy, and visit often."

"...During medical school I was able to travel to a remote area of Honduras to conduct a community survey in Spanish to better understand and address the health and wellness concerns of community members. I have also found my Spanish language skills useful for interacting with the Hispanic patients I treat in British Columbia. I hope to continue to practice medicine in a global context, and of course, Latin America will always hold a special interest for me."
